

Games / News / Half-Life 3 will have to wait – Valve CEO buys luxury estate for over $70 million

June 18, 12:33 | 👁 99 | ⌚ 2 min

Half-Life 3 will have to wait – Valve CEO buys luxury estate for over $70 million

Maksym Zadvorsky

Gabe Newell bought himself a luxurious estate – how much did it cost / collage by Channel 24

Information about the recent expensive purchase of the legendary Gabe Newell has appeared on the Internet. What the new estate of the head of Valve looks like - in the material.

The "father" of Steam has purchased a "small" property in Florida, WSJ reports .

Gabe's luxurious life

Gaben's fortune is estimated at $9.5-10 billion , BOAT reports , and the legendary video game developer is not shy about spending it.

Newell's most recent purchase was a stunning beachfront estate in Manalapan, Florida . The residence is reportedly 20,000 square feet and sits on 2.5 acres. It cost $70.8 million to purchase.

There is everything for a "comfortable" stay here: from an outdoor pool to a private pier. In general, the house is ideal for a big "fan" of the sea, which is the head of Valve, because it has its own tunnel connecting it to the ocean through a private beach.

You can take a closer look at Gabe's new home thanks to a video tour from Premier Estate Properties , which they shared on YouTube back in 2020.

Review of the new Gabena property: watch the video

In recent years, Newell has practically lived "on the water", hardly leaving the deck of his yachts. As he himself said, one of the constant daily rituals is scuba diving, sometimes even several times a day.

However, Gabe has plenty to do besides this. In particular, the flagship of his "fleet" called Leviathan has an on-board hospital, a laboratory, a spa and, of course, a bunch of game rooms.

Newell's largest yacht / Photo Oceanco

So, under these living conditions, the fact that millions of gamers are waiting for Half-Life 3 or some changes to Dota 2 or CS 2 is unlikely to worry the CEO of Valve too much.